Location and Public Transportation

The Carey Institute for Global Good is 28 miles southwest of Albany, New York, in the rolling and forested Helderberg Hills. Framed by the Catskill and Berkshire Mountains, the campus is 1800 feet above sea level and overlooks the tiny Dutch-settled community of Rensselaerville.

Albany is accessible by air, rail and bus. USAir, American, and United Airlines as well as a number of "commuter airlines," arrive and depart from the Albany County Airport. The Greyhound and Trailways terminal is located in downtown Albany, and Amtrak has rail service to Hudson, Schenectady and Albany/Rensselaer (NOT Rensselaerville) - all about 30 miles from the Carey Institute for Global Good.

There is no regularly scheduled public transportation from any of these terminals to Rensselaerville. The Carey Institute can arrange for this service if needed, but arrangements must be made in advance of your arrival. Contact the Carey Institute as soon as possible for information. Rental car, taxi and limousine service is available at the airport to points in the Greater Albany area.
